

The Browne Center for Innovative Learning presents: Positively Impacting School Climate through Experiential Anti-bullying and Diversity Programming

The Browne Center's Anti-Bullying and Diversity/Inclusion programs are positively impacting climates in local schools. With both models, we create a customized, experiential learning approach where participants feel valued, safe, and empowered while building classroom communities and behavioral norms. Join us to experience activities from these unique programs.

Learning Objectives:

- Exposure to anti-bullying and diversity concepts, terms, and resources
- Practice in dialogue and skillful discussion around sensitive issues
- Increased knowledge of experiential learning activities that can promote dialogue around anti-bullying and diversity issues

The Trainers:

Tara Flippo (M.A.) is a clinical faculty in UNH's Outdoor Education program and Youth Programs Director at the Browne Center. Tara's passions include facilitation and training in adventure and social justice. She holds a Master's degree in Social Justice and Outdoor Experiential Education from Vermont College and has done significant work in cross-cultural/diversity training and youth development.

Jeff Frigon (M.S.) is Youth Programs Coordinator at the Browne Center. Jeff holds a Master's degree in Experiential Education from the University of Minnesota. He has also worked extensively with at-risk and adjudicated youth both in the classroom and wilderness therapy settings. Jeff is currently involved in the development and implementation of evidence-based anti-bullying and victimization/positive school climate development curricula utilizing adventure and experiential theory and methodology.

Training Length: 6½ hrs. delivered in one day with a hr. lunch break

Cost: $1,500* for two trainers. Group size 6 to 30 people

Electronic activity write-ups are provided post training (included in fee)

